League of Nations Will Also Consider Bulgarian Loan and Other Questions

BY CARLE TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR GENEVA - The most important item on the provisional agenda of the forty-ninth session of the Council of the League of Nations is the request of the Little Entente for an investigation into the alleged smuggling of arms into Hungary in contravention of the disarmament clauses of the peace treaty. # Dr. Schacht Tells of His Struggle to Put End to Currency Inflation in Germany known in Germany's most prosper-ous day. The real story of Ger-many's period of inflation has never been adequately told in picturesque and popular style. It deserves the telling in extenso if only that other gaged in other activities to undertake this particular task. Therefore it did not try, but passed on the colossal task to Dr. Schacht, economist and financier.

Changed Environment

I met Dr. Schacht after the critical point in his work had been passed. It was in Berlin a few weeks ago. The bundles of paper money of my first visit had disappeared. Men no longer crowded about bulletin boards to discover what the marks they had carned that day were worth in purchasing power. Shopkeepers no longer marked up their prices three or four times a day to keep pace or four times a day to keep pace with falling money. A city full of people, busily engaged in recouping the losses of the past, and taking the value of their money as a matter of course, has replaced the feverish and apprehensive Berlin of five years ago. In the spacious office of the president of the Reichsbank, surrounded by dignified furniture and works of art, sat the man, who more than any one individual had accomplished this transformation. As I glanced at his environment I recalled his own description of his first quarters:

"In the Finance Ministry of the Reich in the Wilhelmstrasse," he wrote, "there had been reserved for me a half-dark room jutting out over a narrow court, which for this reason, presumably, had hitherto remained untenanted. A bare writing table with writing materials and a telephone were the only furniture placed at my disposal. All that I could obtain for my secretary, the only supporter I had brought over to my new office from my former sur-roundings, was a narrow room adoining with one window; it had altherto apparently served for the office caretakers to keep their things

Supply and Demand of Mark president of the Reichsbank, received me—as different as was the atmosphere in the business world outside his windows. Into the details of the struggle which finally checked inflation and stabilised the mark it is not my intention to enter here. The story is intensely technical and, although Herr Schacht says that certain phases of it "read like a satiric play following on the tragic triology of the rest of the story," it is not easy to make the ironic quality evident. Perhaps that which sounds most ironic is the fact that it was found mechanically impossible to print the gaudity colored bits of print the gaudily colored bits of paper miscalled marks fast enough to supply the demand of the business world, while, on the other hand, the world, while, on the other hand, the people who received them could not people who received them could not get rid of them fast enough to avoid loss. Men's memories are prover-bially short and there are probably few outside of Germany, or of inter-national financial circles, who now remember that in 1923 the German mark was worth 630,000,000,000 to the dollar—rather less, I should judge, than the cost of the paper and

than the cost of the paper and printing.

Indeed Dr. Schacht says that at the time 133 printing offices, 1783 machines and 30 paper mills were working exclusively on the Reichsbank circulation. Even at that time the rate was higher outside Germany, and in the speculative exchanges than it was where the Government could fix an arbitrary rate. Accordcould fix an arbitrary rate. Accordingly the first step of the new Currency Commissioner was to lower the face value of the paper marks to 4.200,000,000,000 to the dollar. The figures simply baffle the ordinary comprehension and the thought of a comprehension, and the thought of a unit of such infinitesimal value fur-nishes the ironic quality in the finan-cial situation to which Dr. Schacht

The real effect was to eliminate the paper mark from circulation, and to substitute first the rentenmark, and subsequently the gold mark, which is today the unit of circulation in Germany. It paved the way, too, for the introduction of the Dawes plan, of which he had been an active supporter. Finally it wiped out practically all internal indebtedness, and at the cruel cost of beggary to the classes who had been living upon small incomes, drawn from painfully saved capital, put the German state in a position to erect a new financial known in Germany's most prosperwithin Germany, and particularly among responsible persons belong-ing to the official class, I seldom found any echo of this sentiment. Dr. Schacht, for example, agreed with relling in extenso if only that other proposes may be warned against falling into the same pit.

In November, 1923, the Government of the Reich appointed Dr. "Germany will be perfectly able to meet the Dawes payments," he said, "that is, so far as possession of the necessary funds is concerned. Our people are working hard, business is good, and as much progress as could be expected is being made in building up again the reservoirs of capital the Government was too much engaged in other activities to undergone. And we have the will to carry out the Dawes plan—for the present, that is. Ultimately, of course, some period must be set for the end of the payments required of us. "You know, all Americans know, that before the war Germany ranked as one of the most highly developed of European countries. Your people came over to study our methods of municipal administration, hygiene and social betterment. Your ambi-tious young collegians sought their postgraduate education in our universities. But not only was this great social organization wrecked by the war, but the capital necessary for its maintenance or replacement was wasted. At all times such institutions are supported and extended by borrowed capital, since their benefits spread over decades and it is reasonable to spread their burdens equally.

"But what shall we do now? It is unthinkable that we should abandon the structure of culture which the German people had erected throughout the centuries. We cannot let our universities, our hospitals, our municipal undertakings go to ruin for lack of replenishment. Accordingly a certain amount of credit abroad may properly be sought for these undertakings. Dr. Schacht has no doubts on this subject. Like most bankers he has very pronounced views as to the obligations of a contract and the sanctity of private property. Indeed his views on the latter subject led to his resignation from the German Democratic Party. That party took the ground that the property former German Kaiser should be forfeited to the state. The foreign craditor may feel assured of the maintenance of these standards, which are themselves his greatest security. Germany will never betray the confidence which foreigners are now reposing alike in her economic capacity and her good faith. The danger, if there be any, is on the political side. The claims of politics ought not, and will not be permitted to take slices out of the German payments at the cost of the clear and say, of the foreign creditors.

"But to return to the Dawes plan As I have said, it is not final. It purposely leaves two important points open—the question of the transfers and the question of the duration of payments. The former question will be either solved, or found insoluble, by the experience of the next two years. Until we have gone through the experience, until we have put to practical test all methods for meeting the increased payments, and particularly devices for making the transfers coincidentally with Ger-many's other large payments to forsuggestion of changes in the plan as tions, against the volume of German borrowing in the international money market, and extravagance in public expenditures. A man high in the German Foreign Office had just denounced Mr. Gilbert's attitude in conversation with me, declaring that it was equivalent to a demand that the whole constitution of the Reich be changed, and federal authority be changed, and federal authority assumed over the financial opera-tions of the states. Dr. Schacht, however, expressed entire approval of the Agent-General's reported utterances—they had not at the time been officially published—and in-sisted that restrictions even more drastic than those applied by the Advisory Board might be necessary. Indeed his attitude was so wholly in harmony with Mr. Gilbert's statements as to give rise to the rumor that the latter had not been made without consultation with the head of the Reichsbank, which, however,

Indicts Versailles Treaty

Certainly no narrow nationalism the part of Dr. Schacht would have precluded such a consultation. He holds that one, perhaps the only good effect of the war has been that it has brought the intellectuals of different countries into closer con-tact than ever before. He holds that this fact will in time break down nationalistic barriers to intercourse and trade. In pressing the need for this closer unity of nations he indicts the Versailles Treaty in terms which cannot forgo quoting literally:

"The dictated peace of Versailles cannot last forever because its premises-not only its econon premises but its ethical and moras premises as well-are false. The inward insincerity and consequent ment can no longer be concealed in the disarmament of Germany by powers whose armaments them-selves are left untouched; which asples, but would forbid in perpetuity the adhesion of Austria to Germany; which asserts the significance of plebiscites as decisive of the des-tinies of countries, but in the teeth

All A. C. Five-Tube B-D Receiver Is Described

New Type of Tubes and One Stage of Transformer Coupled Audio Feature New Design

So many readers have been following the Browning-Drake receiver developments that we feel sure the following article by Glenn H. Browning will prove interesting.

Drake has been an extremely popular set for the home constructor to build and during this time over 150. 000 have been constructed with satisfactory results. The set combines one stage of efficient tuned radiofrequency amplification together with a regenerative detector built around a transformer developed by Frederick H. Drake and the writer at Cruft Laboratory, Harvard Uni-tion on a circuit equals one or two stages of the average tuned radio-frequency amplification, so that this, together with the efficiency of the quency stage, makes a set which is extremely sensitive and sufficiently selective for most purpublic of a new Browning-Drake Kit, which might be termed Single-Control Unit, it seems particularly advisable to give the construction of a complete A. C. operated receiver to the public at this time.

As most of the readers realize, A. C. tubes are coming into more or less prominence. There are two general types of tubes which may be used. One is the heater type which consists of a filament which heats a metallic thimble or cathode surrounding it, which in turn gives off the electron respond almost exactly to the grid and the plate of the ordinary 201-A tube. This tube is exemplified by the 327 and 227 as well as the Kellogg and Arcturus tubes. The other type referred to has no cathode or heater. Consequently, it has a four-prong base. The filament in this case is sufficiently heavy so that its temperature will remain constant during the period when the alternating current is charging at the rate of 60 cycles a second. An example of this tube is found in the 326 or 226 type. Each tube has its advantages, though as a general rule the heater type is preferred. In the five-tube Set to be described, two of the heater types or 327's are used, one as a radio-frequency amplifier and an other as a detector. In addition, two of the 326's are used for the audio amplifier stages. A power tube such as the 171 or the 112 is employed for the last stage. Detector Tube Connections As has been mentioned before, the circuit for the Browning-Drake re-ceiver has been changed only in minor details during the past years.

However, the new kit brings the receiver up to date from an appearance standpoint as well as from a mechanical point of view.

The audio system here recom-

ded consists of the transformer and two stages of resistance which give ample volume and very fine tone

It will be noted that the volume control consists of a Clarostat in series with the plus B, R, F, lead. This cuts down the plate voltage on the first tube, consequently decreasing the volume when the resistance of the Clarostat is high. All the possible volume controls that could be thought of have been tried out and this one is found to be the most effective and satisfactory, effective and satisfactory.

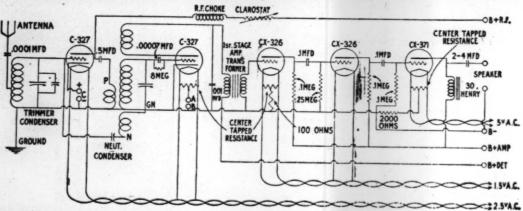

After the receiver has been comcarefully checked it is ready to put into operation. It is always wise at first to place tubes in their sockets For the last four years Browning-trake has been an extremely popu-transformer such as the AmerTran is used in the first stage. ### Breaking the "Rules" in Decorating rules that are sent broadcast would have been sufficient yellow to and the real laws upon which this type of art work rests. Rules are usually limited and dogmatic statements beyond which some amateur worker cannot see: upon basic laws are built the infinitely varied designs. What is the secret and how can the layman learn to appreciate and possibility that someone has found "works," whereas the law is applilight, or refreshing coolness in those variety of expression.

The clearest example that provokes immediate attention is the vokes immediate attention is the much-used rule about colors in relation to exposures in a house. "Warm colors in cool rooms—cool colors in warm rooms" has been generally interpreted narrowly by having all dominant accents and body tones on the north side of the house in yellows or its derivatives, buff, cream, tan, or in orange or red: and on the south side, the blues, greens and purples, lavenders, orchids, mulberry, plum. The interpretation of such a general statement is mislead-

There was no blare of trumtones of gray. With all of the pink accents were obtrusively pink-display, the room was unattractive, while the light was being reflected display, the room was unattractive. Of course, part of the unattractiveness came from the overaccentua-tion of one color, but added to that disagreeable effect there was a feeling of chill which theoretic pinks had not dispelled.

Another room, done by a professional decorator, showed a pale cream paper with a pink floral deaple furniture, a neutral rug and a dressing table in fine flowered chintz having green, lavender, yellow and a very few touches of pinkyred—this being bound in the laven-der. There was a boudoir chair covered and treated in the same fash-ion, and the night stand was of a pinkish tone, with floral decoration. Curtains were sheer cream with an overdrapery of sheer, soft, yellowy-pink. The bedspread was of a plain cream tone. The room was delight-interms of light, not things train ful, warm, delicate, appealing in its in terms of light-not things-train-

Seek the Reason

The answer lies in going back to such a general statement is misleading because it is only a "half-truth," as partial interpretation of a larger truth. one delightful room that was worked out in blue on the north side of a house. But the background of reroom not long ago that had been flected light was set properly before done by one of the followers of this the accents were considered—and half-truth. It was a "pink" room. these were woven into the composition cautiously, skillfully—as were Pink almost knocked one over; pink the accent colors already cited in of the boudoir chair. The walls were soft gray with pinkish sprays of feetly tempered and adjusted with flowers and the rug was in similar other tones. In the "pink" room, the from a hard, cold color. It was an impossible situation from the start. Curtains are also an essential; the light streams through them. It hap pens in the illustration used that the decorators assisted the light by using a delicate warm tone that would perform its office without undue inistence upon itself. They might, under other circumstances, have used a more solid tone for outer accent of overdrapery-never forgetting the dominant essential of light.

One quickly learns after a little while that these delightful effects in decoration are the fruit of years of experiment, and that there is no short road to success in any of these arts. # Yale's Steps to Make Responsible Lawyers

Low standards of preparation for the profession of law which generally prevail in this country and the need for raising them are the chief reasons which have led the Yale Law School to look about the legal field. Last year the number of students in law schools in America was more than 40,000. Only about one-quarter of them attended schools which required as much as two years of college work before admission. A great many of the remainder were attending private proprietary schools run to make money as is any business. At Yale it is felt that the university law schools must set higher standards, must equip their students with the method and the results of research while training them to be advocates, and, as soon as may be, must bring it about that their standards shall be the standards of the whole legal profession. It is not generally recognized that of the 160 rgo a considerable change. whole legal profession. Nor is it generally realized that it is the lawyer and the judge, much more than the legislator, to whom the man in the street must look for the fashioning of the law to suit the ever-changing conditions of life. It has been the tradition that law practice is a stepping-stone to political and financial success. The fit and the unfit may alike enter the profession and struggle for a living, frequently to the damage of their clients and of the community. With smaller numbers and a more flexible method of instruction, Dean Hutchins says, it is possible to investigate more easily the problem of what to teach. One of the aspects of that problem which has worried educators for years is the relationship between the law and the other social sciences. Most law teachers are now sciences. Most law teachers are now ready to concede that the law is not an isolated body of rules cut off from the habits of society. Most social scientists are prepared to make the same admissions; indeed, some of them have gone so far as to suggest that all social science courses might well be law courses, since in the cases is found the most dramatic presentation of the question raised in the textbooks in economic by the law schools, this connection is particularly clear. An eminent economist has been appointed to the faculty to teach in the field of gov-ernment control of business. At the same time the law school is making every effort to co-operate with the social science groups in other schools of the university with a view of giving its students all that Yale can offer in this area.

The trustees of the estate of John W. Sterling of New York have given Yale $3,500,000 for a group of law buildings in which Yale hopes to introduce something of the spirit and atmosphere of the English inns-of-court. The men will live together. Thus will be developed an intimate sense of professional solidarity and interest in legal problems.

The buildings as a whole are planned to further at every point the distinctive program which the school has adopted. There are a few large lecture rooms and a great many seminar rooms and offices. To help carry out the school's intention to follow the signing of the arbitra-tion treaty between the United States and France as regards the other nations of the world? What reaction, in your opinion, will be felt by Japan and England when their treaties with the United States expire this year?

Is the outlawry of war brought appreciably nearer by the arbitration treaty? Why?

Does the new treaty go as far as the Briand proposal, and in what way does it show that both nations are opposed to war as a means of settling international difficulties?

In one instance the writer illustrates the homely, simple wisdom of the farmers, who are called before the county official, the latter telling them of many plans he has worked out for their best. Stolidly, how-ever, they remain utterly unrespon-sive to his urging, even as they re-main entirely silent. In exaspera-tion their would-be benefactor finally asks insistently, "Don't you know I only want your best?" Song From "Paracelsus"

Over the sea our galleys went, With cleaving prows in order brave, To a speeding wind and a bounding wave—

A gallant armament: Each bark built out of a forest-tree Left leafy and rough as first it

And nailed all over the gaping sides, Within and without, with black bullhides, Seethed in fat and supplied in flame, To bear the playful billows' game: So each good ship was rude to see, Rude and bare to the outward view, But each upbore a stately tent;
Where cedar pales in scented row
Kept out the flakes of the dancing brine:

And an awning drooped the mast below, In fold on fold of the purple fine, That neither noontide nor star-

When the sun dawned, oh, gay and We set the sail and plied the oar: But when the night-wind blew like breath,

For joy of one day's voyage more, We sang together on the wide sea. Like men at peace on a peaceful Each sail was loosed to the wind so free, Each helm made sure by the twilight star, And

In a circle round its wondrous tent. Whence gleamed soft light and curled rich scent. And with light and perfume music

So the stars wheeled round, and the darkness past, And at morn we started beside the mast, And still each ship was sailing fast! -Browning, Poems,

RICE TREND

Easy Tendency of Market Followed by Better Tone Later

NEW YORK, Feb. 10 (P) - Price nents in today's stock market rather indecisive, but the gen-end appeared to be downward.

lative uneasiness over the esent of a new high record in tablishment of a new high record in the volume of brokers' loans appeared to be the chief selling influence, although week-end profit-taking also was a factor. Trading showed a marked failing off in volume.

The increase of 303,073 tons in January untilled orders of the United States Ricel Corporation, bringing the total to 4,275,947 tons, the largest since March, 1926, was about in line with Wall Street's expectations. Steel common failed to make much response to the announcement, although it was well supported around the 145 level.

Rubbers and oils were under heavy selling pressure as a result of unfavorable trade news. Houston, General Asphalt; common and preferred. United States Rubber first preferred and Goodrich all sold down 3 to nearly 5 points. Du Pont and Ameritan Railway Express broke 5 points each. Coal and coal-carrying railroad shares also showed a tendency to weakness, presumably in reflection of the unseasonably warm winter.

Bullish operations continued, however, in a few stocks. American Smelting was run up more than 3 points to 180%, and Vick Chemical climbed nearly 4 points to a new top at 68.

points to 180%, and Vick Chemical climbed nearly 4 points to a new top at 68.

The closing was steady, Speculative confidence on the long side was restored in some degree when several shares which had been sold freely reversed their trend. Montgomery Ward. Vanadium Steel and International Nickel were prominent in the late rally, while Pittsburgh Coal, Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron and Union Pacific were bought at rising prices. Total sales approximated 2, 100,000 shares.

Foreign exchanges opened steady, sterling cables ruling around 34.87, and French francs around 3,92% points.

Bond prices showed a firmer trend today, but the volume of transactions was again of average proportions.

Demand for railroad liens was somewhat larger, Northern Pacific 6s and 3s and Denver & Rio Grande Western 5s receiving the most attention. Interborough Rapid Transit 5s were offered in rather large amounts, but Brooklyn Manhattan Transit 6s continued to have good support.

Rather large buying developed in some of the Italian municipal issues, especially Milan 6½s and Rome 6½s. The foregoing group as a whole followed a firm trend. with moderate selling of Tokyo Electric Light 6s, possibly in reflection of the offering yesterday of the new Nippon Electric Power Company issue.

Prompt oversubscription was reported of the $20,000,000 Standard Oil of New York 4½s, offered this morning.

WIRE WHEEL CORP. TO SPLIT STOCK-PHENOMENAL RISE

Less than a year ago the Wire Wheel Corporation of America was reorganized. Its stock was to be had for a few cents a share. One thousand shares, in fact, were purchased at auction by a Boston investor at $1 "for the lot," It is now selling at $250 a share and stockholders have just approved a plan to split the common ten for one.

The company has virtual control of the manufacture of wire wheels through ownership of valuable patents. In the reorganization of April, 1927, it was capitalized with 12,000 shares of $7 cumulative preferred stocks, 12,000 shares of Class A stock and 33,- of $7 cumulative preferred stocks, 12,000 shares of Class A stock and 33,-334 shares of common.

In the 12 months to Dec. 31, 1927, the reorganized concern showed a gross income of $1,008,362, and net profits of $602,691, as compared with gross of $374,632 and net of $107,118 in 1926.

Net income of $602,691 in 1927 after allowing for $7 a share on the preferred stock and $5 a share on the Class A stock is equal to $13,76 a share of common before the split-up.

The predecessor company operated at a loss of $469,574 in 1925; at a loss of $200,107 in 1924 and at a loss of $351,490 in 1923.

At the close of 1927 quick assets stood in a 10-to-1 ratio to current liabilities. Cash alone was over four times current liabilities of $156,080.

UNFILLED STEEL ORDERS INCREASED

NEW YORK, Feb. 10 (P)—Unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation at the close of January amounted to $4.275,947 tons, an increase of 303.073 tons compared with the end of the preceding month.

This is the first time the unfilled tonnage figures have crossed the 4.000,000 mark since March 31, 1926. Unfilled orders of 3,972,874 tons were reported as of Dec. 31, which was an increase of 518,430 tons over the total of 3,454,444 tons Nov. 30. The figure for Oct. 31 was 3,341,040, and for Jan. 31, 1927, unfilled orders amounted to 3,800,177.

A steady increase in the tonnage figures has been maintained since the end of May, last year, and today's figure is an increase over that month of 1,225,006 tons.

The True Story

Young Investor with Unusual Foresight

"ABOUT two years ago," he said in talking with us, "I read your cir-cular describing the MASSACHU-SETTS INVESTORS TRUST. I was impressed with the published list of common stocks which the Trust owned. The Trust idea of placing a small sum in partnership with a large number of corporations, and letting them increase it over a period of years, struck me as safe and profitable."

"I decided then to buy my own stocks and form my own Trust, but in two years I've learned this: That I can't attend to my own business and the investment business at the same time. Moreover, your Trustees have better sources of information and a large available capital to work with. You've beaten me."

THEN we asked him, "Have you any investment plan that you are working out?" "Yes," he answered, "When I'm ten or fifteen years older. I want, if possible, a definite capital and income so I won't be struggling along frommonth to month. I want to be financially comfortable and am planning to make today's surplus earnings provide for my comfort then. That's why I'm investing in the MASSACHUSETTS INVESTORS TRUST."

HE will use his dividends to purchase more Trust shares, thus compounding his capital and dividends;-our Reinvestment Plan. As he was leaving our office we asked his age, and he replied, "I'm twenty-six."

THERE is food for thought in this young man's foresight for many older investors; -A definite, concrete program for making today's savings work and increase safely, to provide comfort and relaxation or to permit retirement or travel at some future time.

With this Trust Fund as a basis we are specializing in "Future Income Plans" designed to mature in five, ten or fifteen years. Why not plan your financial future today by a call at our office or by a request for information by mail?

STEEL OUPUT GAINS

Ingot production of steel is at about 84 per cent of capacity, compared with 83 per cent a week ago. The gain is due to higher rates among independents, as United States Steel shows a small decrease. Independents average around 80 per cent, compared with 78 per cent aweek ago. The Steel Corporation rate is slightly above 38 per cent, compared with 78 per cent aweek ago. The Steel Corporation rate is slightly above 38 per cent compared with nearly 89 per cent last week. The small decrease this week is not considered significant.

Investors' Preferred Stock, A, '7% Cumulative, Producers' Common Stock, B (special for employee ownership) Common Stock, C, 22,276 shares, From his letter Austin T. Levy, Esq., Treasurer, further summarizes as follows:

BUSINESS: The Company manufactures high-grade worsted goods for men's wear, conducting each step in the production from scouring and combing the wool to dyeing and finishing the cloth. Company's product has a wide distribution among wholesale clothing manufacturers. Annual production approximately 3,500,-000 yards.

Plants are located at Harrisville, Ashaway, Greenville and Mapleville, R. I. and East Woodstock, Conn., and contain only machinery of the latest design, the Company having spent $2,151,000 during the past six years on its plants. Plants, equipment and employee dwellings, carried on the Company's books at the depreciated value of $2,761,887, were valued in excess of $4,100,000, after depreciation, in an appraisal com-

Total net assets, as of December 31, 1927 but including the proceeds of this financing, are $4,897,607 or $3,265 per $1,000 Debenture. Net current assets alone equal $2,135,720 or $1,423 per $1,000 Debenture. Total current assets are more than 434 times current liabilities.

EARNINGS: For the five years ended December 31, 1927, net earnings after depreciation averaged $586,421 or over 7 times the interest requirement of $82,500 on these Debentures; for the last three years of this period such earnings averaged over 8.8 times this requirement. For the year ended December 31, 1927. these earnings were $829,488 or over 10 times this interest requirement.

PURPOSE OF ISSUE: Proceeds of these $1,500,000 Debentures will be used to retire the Company's present mortgage indebtedness and to increase its working capital.

SINKING FUND: The Indenture will provide for an accumulative sinking fund, sufficient to retire over 70% of all Series A Debentures before maturity.

Greatest International Winter Sports Carnival of Olympic Meets Starts Tomorrow

pic Meets Starts Tomoprow

Special to The Christian Science Monitor St. MORITZ—The greatest interaktional winter sports festival that the world has ever known begins here, Feb. 11, when the representatives of 25 nations—some 700 athletes in all—make their colorful parade, to the music of national airs, in the opening ceremony of the Second Olympic Winter Games. The much-discussed policy of expansion in the Program of the Olympic Games, a policy which Britain first adopted by the introduction of all kinds of fresh events into the London festival of 1908, has been particularly marked in the winter sports section, held as a separate part of the games for the first time at Chammonix, France, in 1924.

The graceful art of figure-skating made its initial appearance in the Olympic program in 1908, when tremendous interest was aroused by the entry of Irving Brokaw, the first American to compete in a serious figure-skating contest in England. The system of skating and the details of competition were greatly different from those to which he was accustemed in the United States veteran squash tennis championship Thursday, thereby that the United States veteran squash tennis championship Thursday, thereby the United States veteran squash tennis championship Thursday, thereby the United States veteran squash tennis championship Thursday, thereby the United States veteran squash tennis championship Thursday, thereby the United States veteran squash tennis championship Thursday, thereby that the United States veteran squash tennis championship Thursday, thereby the United States veteran squash tennis championship Thursday, thereby the United States veteran squash tennis championship Thursday, thereby the United States veteran squash tennis championship Thursday, thereby the United States veteran squash tennis championship Thursday, thereby the United States veteran squash tennis championship Thursday, thereby the thereby with the busic proposed to the United States in the United States in the United States in the United States

No Games in 1912 Certain difficulties of organization, combined with the near approach of the Northern Winter Games and Baron Pierre de Coubertin's avowed disapproval of an extension in the program, led to the abandonment of skating in the 1912 games at Stock-holm. The projected Berlin games of 1916 were blotted out by the smoke of Both figure skating and ice hockey were brought into the hurriedly arranged program at Antwerp in 1920, and the chief honors went to Sweden. Norway, Finland, United States, Canada, Great Britain and Czechoslovakia. So popular did winter sports become in many nations after the war that the International Olympic Committee, at its twenty-second meeting in Rome in 1923, decided that a really representative and separate winter sports section should be arranged to precede the Paris games in 1924. In due course, 18 nations assembled for a memorable fortinght, at Chamonix, beneath the shadow of majestic Mont Blanc. Those nations, in the final order of their Olympic classification, were:

As the Chamonix games were such a pronounced success, the International Olympic Committee afterward decided to institute a separate cycle of winter Olympics, and authorized any gountry that was unable to stage them, when its time came to hold the games, to pass over the responsibility to another whose climatic conditions and topography allowed it to step into the breach. So, as Holland, where the breach. So, as Holland, where the main games will be celebrated this year, could not provide the essentials for a winter program, the Swiss Olympic Committee agreed to arrange the meeting at St. Moritz. # DUTCH AIR LINE FOR EAST INDIES IS NOW ASSURED

Government Has Agreed to Subsidize Company to Organize Service

THE HAGUE—The Dutch East Indies are now assured of a modern system of air lines for passengers and goods transportation. A decision has been taken lately by the Batavia (Java) People's Council, the representative body, to subsidize a Dutch concern which, with a capital of 5,000,000 florins, will organize the air traffic under supervision of the air traffic, under supervision of the Government. For 1928, this subsidy will be 300,000 florins, and the following years, until the end of the contract, 1,000,000 florins per annum. In exchange for these subsidies the Government may fix the air routes and the time-tables. Seventy-five per cent of the eventual profits go to the governmental treasury, and 25 per cent to the concern.

There are three men who are chiefly to be congratulated for this achievement of far-reaching consequences, as they had the main part in bringing it about. They are Mr. A. Plesman, director of the Royal Dutch Air Services, who recently visited large expectable for that purpose. Java especially for that purpose; Mr. De Jongh, director of the Gov-ernment public works at Batavia, and Mr. Delprat of Amsterdam, Holland, representing the Dutch financiers, who accompanied Mr. Plesman on his

A certain amount of opposition had to be overcome, and this was not done until the advantages to be gained by air line connection between Holland and Java were shown, as well as a well-organized air line system in the East Indian colonies to be essential. Moreover, it was pointed out how the Dutch East Inland to Australia. When the Dutch Indies has organized a modern air service, this could probably be used by the British as a part of their transcontinental system. On the other hand, Holland could get the benefit of British lines in India for the Holland-Java connection.

It is hoped that in September of the current year the Java lines Batavia-Semarang-Surabaya and Batavia-Bandoong may be opened. As hasis for passenger traffic a fare of 15 cents Dutch (6 American cents) per mile is fixed. The prospects are almost ideal, large distances, plenty of room for airdromes and splen-did atmospheric conditions, except in the monsoon, when only a few hours a day flying will be less easy. The Java services will commence with four airplanes. If in 1928 the Java service is working, the line Batavia-Singapore-Medan will be opened in the first months of 1929, for which two seaplanes will be or-dered. The airplanes will come from Holland, and they will fly to Java, if the Royal Dutch Air Service find the insurance companies willing to cover the risks. Until now the Royal Dutch Air Service planes' insurance was valid only as far as the Balkans. Within six years the Royal Dutch Air Service expects to have a regular air service between Holland and its Dutch East Indian colonies, or pos-

More World Court Negotiations

CENATOR GILLETT'S World Court resolu-SENATOR GILLETT'S World Court resolu-tion, introduced in the Senate on Monday afternoon, should be promptly passed. After two "whereases," which simply state un-disputed facts, it declares that the Senate of the United States "suggests to the President the ad-visability of a further exchange of views with the signatory states in order to establish whether the differences between the United States and the signatory states can be satisfactorily adjusted." What possible embarrassment could the adoption of such a resolution cause the United States? Only a treaty of peace is concluded without negotiations and is imposed on the vanquished. For all other forms of international agreement, protracted and even tedious pourparlers and interchanges are required. With the United States unwilling, officially, to have any connection with the League of Nations, adherence to the World Court, which is not unrelated to the League, is surely a prob-lem which is worthy of painstaking negotiations in order to see whether a satisfactory modus vivendi cannot be agreed to. In November, 1926, the United States declared that further negotiations were not possible. The Gillett resolution seeks for a change of that

The World Court proposal has been before the American people for eight years. In Febru-ary, 1920, Elihu Root was named a member of the Committee of Jurists to draft the statute of the Court. In September, 1921, Prof. John Bas-sett Moore, of Columbia University, one of the most distinguished American authorities on international law, was named a member of the Court. In February, 1923, President Harding and Secretary Hughes urged adherence to the protocol of signature of the World Court, with certain reservations. In December, 1923, President Coolidge reiterated this recommendation. He was no less favorable to the proposal in his 1924 message. Action was not finally taken by the Senate until the spring of 1926. Five reservations were made.

Forty signatories of the Court Protocol met at Geneva on Sept. 1, 1926. The five American reservations were discussed. The first four reservations caused no special difficulty. They related to the refusal of the United States to accept the obligations of the League Covenant, participation in the election of judges, payment of expenses, and amendment of the ment of expenses, and amendment of statute without the consent of the United States. The fifth reservation related to advisory opinions. . To be sure, this matter was a strange one to cause the United States any uneasiness; advisory opinions were rather distinctively an American judicial device, borrowed from Europe in large part through the influence of John Adams. Advisory opinions had been used in Massachusetts and other New England states, and had been adopted in other American commonwealths.

The Conference at Geneva could not accept without question the American reservation on this point. There was some doubt as to just what the reservation meant. Did the United States desire greater privileges than were possessed by other signatory nations? This question could not be answered without further elucidation: but while the Conference did not go the whole way with the United States in respect of advisory opinions, the general attitude of the delegates was favorable, and the reliminary draft of a protocol accepting the American reservations was proposed, "subject to such further exchange of views as the Government of the United States may think useful." The way, therefore, was expressly left open for the further interchange of views, and it is such negotiation that the Gillett resolution proposes.

It is peculiarly appropriate that such a resolution should be introduced by the senior Senator from Massachusetts. The Massachusetts. setts General Court has memorialized Congress on the subject of international peace. The Massachusetts Peace Society has been one of the most steadfast advocates of the judicial adjudication of international disputes. The Senator from Massachusetts undoubtedly introduced his resolution after prior consultation with the President of the United States, who is a resident of Massachusetts. Mr. Coolidge is certainly not unwilling that the Senate pronounce in favor of revived negotiations. Public opinion is in favor of such a course. The platforms of both parties in 1925 favored American adherence to the World Court. In his inaugural address of March 4, 1925, President Coolidge declared that "we ought not to withhold our sanction because of any small and inessential differences." The Gillett resolution points the way to the elimination of such small differ-

The St. Lawrence Seaway

UICKENING of Canadian public interest in the proposed deep waterway from the head of the Great Lakes to the Gulf of St. Lawrence is to be seen in the opening debates of the Dominion Parliament at Ottawa. The leader of the opposition party in the House of Commons, R. B. Bennett, commented upon the absence of any reference to the St. Lawrence project in the speech from the throne. When the Premier, W. L. Mackenzie King replied, he agreed that "there are few if any questions which have come before Parliament more important and far-reaching in many of its bearings than the question of the deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway." As it is an international question, the Government deemed it better to refrain from inviting hasty discussion of its many features. The Prime Minister went on to say, however, that the Government is replying to the dispatch which came from Washington asking for an expression of the Dominion's views in regard to the proposed undertaking.

In the Senate, the first important discussion of the session related to the St. Lawrence seaway. One former Minister of Railways and Canals urged great caution before embarking upon the proposed improvement. Another spoke enthusiastically in favor of it. Hitherto, there has been an impression that the port of Montreal opposed it. The ambition of Toronto to become an ocean port perhaps did, at one time, raise undue apprehension in Montreal. But the chairman of the Montreal Harbor Commission expressed the view, in the Senate debate, that far from losing any maritime com-merce by the extending of the deep waterway farther up the St. Lawrence to Lake Ontario. Montreal would gain much in trade and com-

Montreal is at present the leading grain port for Atlantic shipping. The volume of grain shipments through the port is increasing steadily. A larger and larger quantity of United States grain is being shipped over the St. Lawrence route. Last year, of the total of 135,000,-000 bushels to be shipped over the existing canal system through Montreal, 91,000,000 bushels came from United States sources. With improved navigation and transfer facilities, there is reason to believe that United States grain, would be carried in still greater volume down the St. Lawrence seaway, The existing canals between Lake Ontario and Montreal can accommodate vessels of fourteen feet draft. The new deep waterway would be built for vessels of twenty feet draft. Montreal could reasonably expect to attract many of the 600-foot freighters with grain the head of the lakes. It is doubtful whether they would proceed much farther east than Montreal; some would perhaps continue as far as the port of Quebec. But they are designed for inland navigation. Lake and ocean shipping would probably continue to exchange cargoes at the port of Montreal. With Montreal's interest thus awakened, increased attention on the part of Canada to the international project may be looked for.

A Social Transformation

EDUCATIONAL and social reformers have abundant cause for encouragement in the light of a recent report by the London County Council Education Offices. They have, further, a just claim to cordial congratulation. One generation of educational and social work has effected a complete transformation in the condition, the habits and the manners of London's people. The report contrasts the present condition of a certain London school, chosen because it was one of a number of "tough schools, with its condition in 1895. That the people of the vicinity have attained a vastly higher level of self-respect is evident from the fact that a "collar census" in those days showed that only wenty-one boys out of 400 wore col-lars. Many of them had no shoes or jackets. Today collars are universal, blazers are noticeable, and the old "trousers of miscellaneous sizes and chequered family history have given place to shorts." Appearance is by no means a negligible symptom in the course of social improvement; and this revolution in the dress of the boys of the district is an indication of a corresponding change in ideas and ideals.

More important still, however, is the improvement which has taken place in manners and habits. Thirty years ago the relations between the local inhabitants and the education authorities in the vicinity of this and other schools were those of hostility. The neighborhood was at war with the school; the children were at war with the teachers; and the parents sided in this war with the children. Physical violence was common; truancy was a regular feature of school activities. But today all that is changed. The sons and daughters of former pupils attend the school respectably clad, well mannered, part in the most surprising and the most gratifying development of all—the building up of a school tradition. The sentiment of the locality today is for, not against, the work of the school and the efforts of the teachers.

The question is sometimes asked, What is the return for national expenditure on education and social services? The evidence of moral upliftment contained in this London report provides one answer, at least, which nothing can gainsay. Whatever may be the material return for such expenditure the intangible but very definite return expressed in "the condition of the people" is of such a substantial nature as to justify every penny that the Nation has spent on educational and social welfare.

International Ethics

TATHEN one refers to the dictionary it will be found that an aggressor is the person who makes the first attack, who commits the earliest act of hostility or offense. Aggression is the gesture which leads to a war or a controversy. These and similar definitions are provided by the lexicographers. But they are not particularly helpful, for the question of which is the first act, and who is responsible for it, is not thus determined.

The first overt blow may quite conceivably be struck in self-defense. It may have been preceded by deliberate provocation, and it may forestall an attack. Most countries which go to war find a pretext in the attitude of the adversary. They do not admit that they are aggressors. To this day, there is, for example, discussion as to who was the aggressor in the Franco-Prussian war of 1870. France may be shown to have begun the war, but Bismarck had made changes in the famous Ems dispatch which brought about the war.

When the Geneva protocol was considered, it was suggested that the aggressor would be the nation which refused to arbitrate. That is not a completely satisfactory definition, but it comes as near the heart of the question as any other form of words. One can nevertheless imagine a dispute which one party would hold to be purely domestic, and therefore not to be submitted to an international body. Several such problems will occur to everyone. A country which, from its own point of view, rightly stands on its national sovereignty, might be assaulted by another country which is perfectly willing to bring the reserved subject to arbitration, and under this definition the country which is attacked would be the aggressor. Common sense will almost invariably decide who is the aggressor, but legal phraseology might, in many cases, run contrary to common sense. That is why, in the outlawing of war, it is so difficult to draw distinctions, for the purposes of a pact, between one kind of war and another kind of war. It appears to be unprofitable to turn adjectives in this way and that. In old Byzantium the love of the discussion of words was carried to extremes, and it was this word-chopping and logic-spinning which broke up Byzantium. Better it is to eliminate the whole idea of war. Terminology may be deceptive. What matters is the intention.

That is why it is to be hoped that little time be wasted on the definition of justifiable and unjustifiable warfare. It is warfare as such that should be banished from the earth. When it is banished from men's thoughts it will no longer be possible. In the meantime, logomachy is a poor sport, and only serves to cloud, instead of to clarify, the issues. Many countries today are it is believed truly already in the server of the server o are, it is believed, truly sincere in their desire to obviate war. The more simply they express their desire the more certain it will be that their desire will be realized. International ethics rule out war. The interest and the conscience of mankind have made warfare a demoded method of settling differences. Let us have more constructive thinking. Instead of defining war, let us resolutely turn our thoughts to peace.

Further Study Needed

THAT it is not at this moment possible to pronounce final judgment on the merits of the opposing views regarding the relation of athletics to scholarship in the colleges and universities of the United States is the finding of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching in its annual report recently made public by Dr. Henry Smith Pritchett, president of the foundation. The data accumulated have been turned over to Dr. Howard J. Savage, in charge of the foundation's study of college athletics, for further study.

The findings seem to vary considerably, as might be expected. There were cases where athletes showed a higher scholastic grade than nonathletes, and there, were also instances where the reverse held good. The selection of courses taken by the students had quite a bearing on the subject. Some took courses which were classed "easy," while others took those classed as In some cases the athletes were compared only with the male nonathletes, while in other instances they were compared with the rest of the student body, including both men and women students. Out of nineteen colleges where both the men and women were considered, there were five which claimed that the athletes averaged higher, three where the average was equal, and eleven where the athletes' standard was lower. Out of thirteen colleges where the athletes were compared with the rest of the male students, eight reported a higher average for the athletes,' while the other five reported a lower average.

Football is the sport which has been regarded as the most overemphasized of the college sports, and the result of the survey seems to indicate that the football player has, on the average, been receiving lower grades. In fact, this class of athlete seems to have received lower grades even than the athletes who have been engaged in two or more sports.

That the foundation should not yet have succeeded definitely in determining the question will not come as a great surprise to those who have been trying to solve the problem. As the foundation evidently has discovered, there are many factors which must be taken into consideration before the question can be accurately answered. Conditions vary greatly in different colleges, and the curriculums offer such a variety of courses that it is difficult to determine the relative merits of the scholastic work done by the various students. Passing some courses would not be nearly so meritorious as passing some others, and just how to balance these differences is a question.

Another important factor is the question as to how well the athlete would have done had he devoted all his time to study, as well as to how much poorer the scholastic work of a student might have been had he engaged in some form of athletics. Then again, there is no doubt that the athlete gains something in the way of learning and experience from competition, and it would seem as if this, in some way, should be credited to the athlete for any slight decrease he might show in scholastic attainment. Whether or not the foundation is ever able definitely to decide the question, it will no doubt compile a report which will give some interesting and instructive information regarding athletic and scholastic work in the higher institutions of learning of the United States.

Editorial Notes

Joseph A. Warren, Police Commissioner of New York, passes the credit for a decrease in crime on to others with these words, found in his report for 1927 made to Mayor Walker: "... to the increased interest and enlarged police personnel, reorganization of the department by former Commissioner George V. McLaughlin, the Baumes laws and the co-operation of the Mayor, the district attorneys and the courts.' Modesty forbids him from adding that he has been able to co-ordinate these agencies to enhance their effectiveness for law enforcement.

Herschel Bickel of the New York Evening Post says the word "tip" is an abbreviation of a sign, "to insure promptness," painted on a contribution box by employees of a tavern in England over 400 years ago. In view of the extent to which the practice has been carried on in recent times, it might be an abbreviation for "to insure peace," or, from the vast army of tippees, for "the immense parade."

The five thousand red cedar shingles recently sent by mail from the State of Washington to influential individuals in Washington, D. C., bearing an inscription protesting against alleged tariff discrimination, and seeking a better deal for the shingle men of the Pacific Northwest, should go far in bringing about the desired "protection."

With efforts to establish standard qualifications for "realtors" and the adoption of codes of ethics by associations of real estate men, the public is learning to expect a lot from them.

Noon Hour in London

Tondon London! In fact, it is unusually fair. The sun is shining brightly, as if in triumphant satisfaction over its prompt conquest of the snow king who reigned here in pompous, if short-lived, majesty just the other day. And now it is almost like summer again, quite as much like it, indeed, as during my visit last July. For of such is the piquantly uncertain London climate. Yet who dare say any of the days in that city of cities are "bad" days? In that connection I remember always the maxim of an old friend, a friend of delightfully buoyant temperament. "There are no such things as 'bad' days," he always insists. "There are only 'different' days!"

are only 'different' days!"

Well, that is the way with London. There are "different" days, days when the tone is gray, days when it is softly golden with the mist-mellowed sunlight which may quite as likely bathe it on a day in January as on a day in July. There is, I think, an equal charm to both, especially to the person who knows his London and, as a logical consequence, finds himself wonderfully at home in her.

But it is on one of these sunny days in midwinter-or what the gayly inconsequent calendar tells us is midwinter-that London is most vital, most vivacious, most vibrant. And of all the hours of such a day the noon hour best epitomizes the enthusiastic, sentient, sparkling moods of the city that has aged, yet never grown old.

The hour strikes from Big Ben and a score of his retainers. And out into the Strand, into Kingsway, into the Haymarket, everywhere, pour the crowds. Delight at the sprightly day so possesses everyone that it seems to sweep like a mounting billow over the multitudes. The sunshine is the one theme of remark. Men congratulate one another on it. The sun's smiles on the old town are reflected in the faces of the people in the streets of London as they make their ways here and there to enjoy their noon hour according to a million individual inclina

I would rather mingle with the throngs in the Strand on a bright midwinter day in London than with any other human concourse anywhere at any time. I cannot say just why. Perhaps it is that the mood of these people seems especially happy. It is as if they had found something precious and unexpected; as if to each individual had come a gift of a sparkling, radiant thing that they had not thought to find.

If it is rare, then, for sooth, it is the more to be appreciated. And no one is more appreciative of the sunlight, especially in the winter, than a Londoner. It is not something he can be careless and wasteful and overlavish with, like the dweller in Cairo or San Diego or Honolulu. No, it is reckoned for him in terms of minutes; minutes which, in turn, may be computed as so many golden gems.

And a whole day—in midwinter—well, is it not something to rejoice over?

This is the attitude of the throngs in the London streets during the noon hour today, and that is why it is a pleasure to mingle with them. Nor is there lacking a certain tranquillity here, even at such a time and in such a place. It is as if everyone was determined to lose nothing of the satisfaction of this hour by rushing wildly here and these, disregardful of the efforts of nature on their behalf.

These is none of the turnell of New York in the some contents of the satisfaction of the efforts of nature on their behalf.

their behalf.

There is none of the turmoil of New York, the perilous dashing about between long lines of vehicles, the grim determination to be first on the other side of the street at any cost, the strange driving ferce that permits no moment's leisureliness of speech or movement. And as I move down toward Charing Cross, neither butted, spurned nor jostled by anyone, I think of the other day in New York, at that chaotic period, the "rush hour."

And I am quite sure I prefer London.

The suggestion to the native Londoner that his is a tranquil city leaves him aghast. Surely you are "having him on!" But, no, I am quite serious; relatively speaking, of course. Within a fortnight I have had a good bit of going about to do in both of these two greatest cities of our world. And I pledge you that my feeling, as I walk down the Strand today during this noon hour of a sunny midwinter day, is a reposeful feeling!

And now presently, as all these folk emerge from café, tea room, hotel or club, it appears to me that they wear a contented look, that they return to office and shop and a contented look, that they return to office and shop and countingroom and bank in the humor to resume, without distaste for it, the day's endeavor. And I submit that such sense as this belongs only to a tranquil city.

I like to think that the Londoner, whatever his lot, is on the whole happy, nor yearningly regardful of the lot of any other. And in the general attitude of the throngs here during the noon hour, in the mood of the great city at this period of the day, in the very smiles with which the people accept the great gift of sunlight, I find evi-

And I incline to the belief that there is something here, something apart and distinct from any of the characteristics of another city, which makes up to the Londoner for what another might call the discomfort of some of the conditions amid which he lives. To that thing, as to something tangible, he clings; and I believe that, on the whole, thing tangole, he clings; and I believe that, on the whole, he would not exchange it for the greater material inducements which, for example, New York might offer.

For, after all, this is London, old, gray, dingy, smoky London—but London, city of cities! As I walk down the Strand during this sunny midwinter noon hour, I am more than ever certain that there is no city like it, either for the Londoner or—for me.

From the World's Great Capitals-Paris

TERE is a titbit of European history in the making pleasant to digest. For the first time in fifteen years a French Minister of Foreign Affairs has been a guest at the German Embassy in Paris. Aristide Briand was invited by Ambassador von Hösch to be present at a lunch in honor of Dr. Wirth, former Chancellor of the Reich. For several decades after the war between France and Germany of 1870 there were none of these informal meetings. Just before the World War Raymond Poincaré, then Foreign Affairs Minister, lunched several times at the German Embassy, but from the time hostilities opened until now there has been no such intimate between the German representative in Paris and the man directing French foreign policy as a lunch might afford. In the resumption of this custom there is a strong indication that Franco-German relations are on a better footing than they have been for many years.

Who will be the first to fly to a star? The problem is being earefully considered in France. A learned group, the Société Astronomique de France, have just announced a prize for this year for the best effort tending to make practical inter-planetary flights. It may be the moon, or a star, or a planet which some brave aviator from the earth will first reach. Who knows? Then again it may not be an airman at all who will make this initial adventurous journey, for the Société Astronomique, so it is said, has the plans of an inventor who believes he has made a torpedo which can be shot to the moon. Jules Verne wrote of such a voyage. Had he known that such a prize had been offered as this of the Société Astronomique, would probably have felt encouraged to think that others besides himself did not think the plan of traveling to the moon from the earth was as foolish as it sounded.

4 4 4 France believes in recognizing a good piece of work and awards the Legion of Honor not only to those who have distinguished themselves on battlefields, or as writers of books, or as diplomatists. France goes much further than this, for in the Legion of Honor lists of one week, describing those on whom this distinction has most recently fallen, were a cook, a locksmith and a tailor. Auguste Escother is really far more than a cook. He has been called on by princes and millionaires to decide matters relating to the preparation of delicious dishes for which France is famous. He has written books on the subject and originated in 1893 the "pêche Melba." Jules Lachevrel, the locksmith, has been turning out for some eighty years delicate things in iron and steel. And M. Escaich has been crowned by the Ministry of Work as "the best tailor in France." M. Escaich is an artist, a modernist. His specialty is dinner jackets. He will give you a perfect fit in any cut or color you desire.

If you take a market basket and fill it with potatoes, a cabbage, a loaf of bread, and other foodstuffs in Paris, and then go to London, New York, Rome, Vienna, and do the same thing, the Paris basket will cost the least. A French committee known as the Comité Technique de l'Alimentation has made a careful study of prices with a view of proposing to the French Government how they can best be reduced. In a report now published, the committee urges improved selling conditions and a better organization of marketing facilities. Then prices will come down. Even so, says the committee, the basket of food is less expensive in Paris than in other large cities. The amount one can purchase here for 112 gold francs (5 gold francs to the dollar) will require 120 in Vienna, 148 in Rome, 152 in New York, or 157 in London.

Paris has parted for a time with its public scrivener. Where he has gone or why need not particularly concern us here; but the closing of his small establishment, where he wrote letters or composed legal documents, has drawn attention to his profession. M. Georges Faes is believed to be the last of those men who gained their livelihood by such an employment of their pen.

Preparation is being made for the holding here in November of the second Pan-European Congress. The first was held in October, 1926, in Vienna. Count R N. Coudenhove-Kalergi, the young and brilliant founder of the Pan-European movement of this century, has been recently in Paris discussing the coming conference. In the course of a press statement attributed to him, his quite new theory of the development of Pan-Europe was expounded. He is stated to have recalled how Switzerland grew from the cantons of Schwyz, Uri and Unterwald joining to form a small confederation. Other cantons came in until present Switzerland was evolved. Count Coudenhove-Kalergi asked why France, Poland, Belgium, and the three states of the Little Entente, Czechoslovakia, Jugoslavia and Rumania, could not unite to begin with as did those three cantons. All other countries in Europe would be invited to adhere to this union. And thus might grow up the final European confederation of Pan-Europe. Previous to this he has talked of a Pan-Europe or no Pan-Europe. The idea of the Francish kernel growing into a Pan-European tree is quite new and is, therefore, interesting, although commonly considered impossible of Paris is a city of surprises. Who would have thought, for example, that on entering a modest shop carrying a fine stock of women's handbags he would have found a lion for sale? The shop is near the Porte Saint-Denis, and while you may feel like going there immediately the advice of those who have lived for a long time in Paris is that you first ask your concierge what she thinks about it. The concierge is the gatekeeper of your apartment house, one who opens the main door in the mornings and shuts it at ten in the evenings, opening it after that only to those familiar to her. She is a singularly important person; but this is taking us away from the hear of a puppy shark; so this is a puppy lion aged three and a half months. Born in Paris; price 6000 francs. But ask your concierge before you buy it whether she likes lions.

In Paris art can be ninted. Art is not limited to productions from a brush. Art is something so uppermost in French thought that it creeps into the most curious enterprises. The latest to come to the attention of the public is that the French Mint not only issues coins but also "objets d'art," plaques and medals bearing views of the city. There is an art department at the mint charged with this work, and the as urance is given to those who purchase these objects that only a limited number are struck off, after which the mold is destroyed. One such medal put on the market not long ago showed one of the most picturesque vistas of Paris, namely, the Ile de la Cité as seen from the footbridge of the Pont des Arts.

"Oh, My Ducats"

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

Though not an honest-to-goodness economist. and therefore not a competent critic of such a well-known authority as Professor Fisher, it seems to me that in attempting to heal conditions said to be due to a fluctuating gold value by trying to render the circulating medium elastic through an arbitrary changing of the weight of gold in the various gold coins, or by increasing or decreasing the convertible value of treasury notes and bank bills from time to time to correspond with the metal fluctuations, there would be produced a confusion worse confounded. Such, however, is what your recent editorial, "Oh, My Ducats" and the letter of the professor published in the Monitor appear to advocate as a remedy. My criticism is that by this method he would be treating a symptom instead of the disorder

It is believed that many of the economists of the past have fallen into the error of regarding labor as a mere commodity which, like any other commodity, may be purchased with money, instead of seeing in labor the real basic currency with which money is purchased. That this must be so may readily be apprehended by considering the value of unmanufactured raw material as compared with that of the finished product. If this is granted as a tenable position it should follow that ny increase in the cost to the consumer of the commodities essential to human activities should be met with a corresponding increase in wages whenever this takes place, or as soon thereafter as possible. With this in view the following remedy is suggested: Taking Government figures as a base of the cost of say, the ten most important commodities, first having established the average of this over a period during normal conditions, together with the average wages paid during the same period, let there be published monthly by the Government—or other reliable source using the Government estimates—a bulletin giving the costs of these commodities during the preceding month. If this statement indicates an increase of, say, 2 per cent, or a similar decrease, then all wages should be increased in like ratio, and let this rule also apply to the purchaser

If labor, as it is contended, is the actual basic currency, this would insure an elastic currency, and the worker would be always assured of a sufficiency to meet his current expenses, and inasmuch as it would work both ways it would tend neither to increase nor decrease the cost of actual necessities. Furthermore, it would not have the disturbing effect upon foreign commerce which it is conceived any manipulation of the medium of ex-
